

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE TO VOLUME V.

THIS volume contains the words beginning with the letters H, I, J, K. Including the Main words, to which separate articles are allotted, the special Combinations or compounds, explained and illustrated under the Main words, and the Subordinate entries of obsolete and variant forms entered in their alphabetical places, with a reference to the Main words under which they are treated and illustrated, the number of words amounts to 32,700. The Combinations of simple and obvious meaning, of which lists are given under the Main words, without further explanation, but in most cases with illustrative quotations, number 4,318 more, raising the actual total of words treated in the volume to 37,018.

These words are thus distributed among the four letters:

	Main words.	Subordinate words.	Special Combinations.	Obvious Combinations.	Total ¹ .
H (516 pages)	8,900	2,145	2,260	2,708	16,013
I (530 ")	11,350	1,636	683	778	14,447
J (116 ")	1,727	402	441	419	2,989
K (112 ")	1,577	1,084	495	413	3,569
Total	23,554	5,267	3,879	4,318	37,018

Considered as to their status in the language, the Main words are distinguished approximately into those native or fully naturalized, and still current, those now obsolete (marked †), and those considered as alien or imperfectly naturalized (marked ||). The distribution of the Main words is as follows:

	Current.	Obsolete.	Alien.	Total ² .
H	7,061	1,463	376	8,900
I	7,847	3,333	170	11,350
J	1,361	280	86	1,727
K	1,098	267	212	1,577
Total	17,367	5,343	844	23,554

The differing proportions of the various classes of words here tabulated reflect the different parts played by H, I, J, and K, as initial letters in English. H is, on the whole, a normal letter, containing the usual proportion of old words, Old English and French, with additions from all the sources that normally contribute to the English vocabulary, none of these being in excess, unless, perhaps, the modern learned words from Greek; it contains no Latin prefix. I, on the other hand, containing the words formed with the Latin prefixes in- (il-, im-, ir-), inter-, intra-, intro-, is preponderatingly Latinic. Hence, whereas in the Bosworth-Toller Anglo-Saxon Dictionary H occupies five times as many pages as I, in the modern English dictionary I requires rather more pages than H. But few of these Latinic words are

¹ If to these be added the words in Volumes I-IV, we have for the contents of the first eleven letters of the alphabet, the following figures:

Main words.	Subordinate words.	Special Combinations.	Obvious Combinations.	Total.
106,698	22,658	19,397	18,481	167,234

	Johnson.	Cassell's 'Encyclopædic.'	'Century' Dict.	'Funk's Standard.'	Here.
Total words recorded	{ H 1,533 I 2,012 J 299 K 205	{ 6,853 6,630 1,338 1,412	{ 9,690 7,575 1,736 2,064	{ 9,630 7,846 1,730 2,071	{ 16,013 14,447 2,989 3,569
Words illustrated by quotations	{ H 1,194 I 1,640 J 237 K 150	{ 1,898 2,762 378 322	{ 3,357 3,961 711 595	{ 999 894 198 177	{ 12,118 12,133 2,429 2,474

The quotations in Richardson's Dictionary are, H 4,500, I 6,195, J 901, K 684.

old enough in the language to have sustained any phonetic or even orthographic change, and few of them are of the kind (simple substantives) that readily form compounds; hence, the number of variant forms requiring to be registered as 'subordinate words', and especially of 'combinations', is small in proportion to the whole. On the other hand a great number of the words that have been at various times derived or formed from Latin, have failed to become permanent constituents of the language; they have again gone out of use; hence, the 'obsolete words' in I are disproportionately numerous. J and K are imperfect letters; more than half the words which would belong to them phonetically, are actually spelt with G and C; hence they are lexicographically among the small letters. Also, they were not properly Old English letters; but J contains old words from or through French, while K was substituted in early Middle English for Old English C 'hard' before e, i (y) and u. The proportion of 'combinations' in J and K is somewhat normal, as is also that of 'subordinate words' in J; but in K, owing to so many C words having variants in K, the proportion of 'subordinate words' is enormously large, three times as great as in H and J, and five times as great as in I. Both letters contain a very large number of words adopted from Oriental, African, American, Australian, and Oceanic languages (these being phonetically usually written with J and K, in preference to G and C); hence, the 'alien words' in J are proportionally thrice as many as in I, and one-fourth more than in H; and in K three-and-a-half times as many as in H, and seven times as many as in I. In those pages of K which contain the non-English initial combinations Ka-, Kh-, Kl-, Ko-, Kr-, Ku-, Ky-, these exotic words may be thought to superabound; yet it would have been easy to double their number, if every such word occurring in English books, or current in the English of colonies and dependencies, had been admitted; our constant effort has been to keep down, rather than to exaggerate, this part of 'the white man's burden.'

Many workers have contributed to the production of this volume. In addition to the volunteer Readers, by whom so many of the quotations have been collected, and of whom the chief have been mentioned in Vol. I, the services have to be recorded of Mr. S. Taylor, of the White House, Crossings, Chapel-en-le-Frith, who at an early period arranged the materials for HO- alphabetically and chronologically, and of Mr. A. W. Longden, of Hook Green, Marple, Stockport, who did the same for those of HU- and HV-. The sub-editing of HA- was undertaken by the late Mr. G. A. Schrupf, who, however, at his death, had only partially put the quotations in order as far as Har-. A portion of HE-, including Head and its derivatives, was arranged by Mr. H. M. Fitz-Gibbon, of 49 Merrion Square, Dublin. The materials for HI- were skilfully sub-edited by Dr. R. J. Lloyd, of Liverpool; parts of HO- and HV-, Hoo- to Horus, Hyp- to Hyz-, by the late Mr. John Peto; another part of HO-, Hos- to Hox-, and the whole of HU- by the late Mr. W. Noel Woods, B.A., and Mrs. Woods; part of HV- to Hym-, by Miss M. Quick, Clifton. The whole of the rest of the materials (with the exception of the pronominal words) were sub-edited between 1883 and 1890, by E. L. Brandreth, Esq., Member of Council of the Philological Society, who subsequently also (1895-8) revised and re-subedited the greater part of the letter. For preliminary assistance with I we are indebted mainly to the indefatigable labours of Miss J. E. A. Brown, of Further Barton, near Cirencester, and to the Rev. Canon Rupert Morris, D.D., the former having sub-edited most of the materials as far as the end of Into, the latter the remainder from Intra onward. A section from Inconcealable to Indiscriminate was prepared by the Rev. E. H. Sugden, now Master of Queen's College in the University of Melbourne, before he left England in 1887; and a small portion by Mr. T. Wilson, of Rivers Lodge, Harpenden. The whole of the letter I was subsequently revised, with incorporation of new quotations, by Miss Brown, whose work at the materials for this letter thus extended from 1887 to 1900. The materials for J were, at an early stage (1882-6), arranged by the late Rev. Walter Gregor, D.D., of Pitsligo; the whole was subsequently (1896-9) sub-edited, with much addition of material and investigation of difficult points, by the Rev. C. B. Mount, M.A., Oxford. The materials for K were originally put in order for the Philological Society by Mr. H. Hucks Gibbs, now Lord Aldenham; they have been sub-edited for us during 1892-3, and again in 1899-1900, with great research into the literary history of the Oriental words, by Mr. Brandreth. No fewer than five of these excellent helpers have passed away without seeing the printed sheets of any portion of the letters at which they worked; of their esteemed services, as of those of the survivors above-named, and especially of those of Mr. Brandreth, Miss J. E. A. Brown, and Mr. Mount, whose assistance has been so continuous and so effective, the heartiest acknowledgement is now made.

In the proof stage we have again to record the help of (alas! that it should be necessary so to describe him) the late Fitzedward Hall, D.C.L., of Marlesford, Wickham Market. This help was continued till within a few weeks of his death, which took place on February 1, 1901, at the age of seventy-six. We have had in every volume to record the supremely valuable services gratuitously rendered to the Dictionary by this eminent English scholar, who, as a pure labour of love, for many years devoted several hours every day to the examination of our proofs, in order to make additions to them from his enormous collections of notes on English words, phrases, and idioms, containing quotations from, or references to, thousands of books of the last four centuries. To the Dictionary his death is an incalculable loss, a loss that would indeed have been irreparable but for the fact that he left directions that all his MS. quotations, references, notes, and memoranda, should be handed over to the Editor, and that we should have the free use of the books in his own extensive library to which these referred. We have accordingly begun, with the assistance of many willing hands, to have the quotations indicated in his reference-lists excerpted, put upon slips, and added to our materials, so that the Dictionary may continue in some measure to profit by his researches, although at the cost of much time and labour which during his lifetime he himself bestowed. Hearty acknowledgement is made of the way in which Mr. Richard D. Hall has done everything to facilitate this completion of his honoured father's services to the Dictionary and to English lexicography.

Second only to the contributions of Dr. Fitzedward Hall, in enhancing our illustration of the literary history of individual words, phrases, and constructions, have been those of Dr. W. C. Minor, received week by week for words at which we were actually working. For other help in the proof stage we have to thank the Right Hon. Lord Aldenham; the Rev. Canon Fowler, of Durham; the late Mr. Russell Martineau, M.A. (down to his lamented death in December, 1898); the Rev. J. B. Johnston, B.D., Falkirk; Monsieur F. J. Amours, Glasgow; Mr. A. Caland, Wageningen, Holland; and especially Miss Edith and Miss E. P. Thompson, now of Lansdowne, Bath, and Mr. R. Jowitt Whitwell, of Oxford, whose researches, both in the Bodleian Library and at the Public Record Office, have added much to our illustration of the history of legal and historical terms. Grateful acknowledgement is also made of the etymological assistance rendered by Professor Eduard Sievers, of Leipzig, and by M. Paul Meyer, Member of the Institute of France; as also, in particular words, of that of Professors Napier, J. Wright, Bywater, Robinson Ellis, Driver, Margoliouth, Morfill, and Rhys, of Oxford; Professors Kluge and Schröer (Freiburg-im-Breisgau), Luick (Graz), Morsbach (Göttingen); Dr. J. W. Muller, Leyden; of Mr. J. T. Platts, M.A. with Persian and Indian words, and of Professor Bullock with Chinese words; and especially, in J and K, of Mr. James Platt, junior, of 77 St. Martin's Lane, London, whose researches have enabled us to give the exact history of many words from far-off languages. The friends who have helped in the treatment or investigation of the history of historical, legal, philosophical, scientific, and technical words in this volume are too numerous to mention; most of them have already been named in earlier prefaces; but particular mention must here be made of the help of Mr. R. E. Baynes, M.A.; Rev. Andrew Clark, M.A.; Mr. W. A. Clarke, F.L.S.; Mr. C. H. Firth, M.A., LL.D.; Mr. W. W. Fisher, M.A.; Professor Gotch, F.R.S.; Mr. Horace Hart, M.A.; Mr. R. R. Marett, M.A.; Professor H. A. Miers, M.A.; Professor Odling, F.R.S.; Sir Frederick Pollock, D.C.L.; Mr. G. F. Stout, M.A.; Mr. V. H. Velez, F.R.S.; Mr. C. C. J. Webb, M.A.; Professor J. Cook Wilson; and the late Sir John Stainer, of Oxford; of Professor Alfred Newton, the Rev. Professor Skeat, and Dr. W. Aldis Wright, Cambridge; Mr. W. W. Dobell, Dr. F. J. Furnivall, Mr. James Hammond, Dr. J. A. Kingdon, London; Dr. S. R. Gardiner; the Deputy-Keeper of the Public Records; the Director of the Royal Gardens, Kew; the Director of the Natural History Museum, South Kensington; the Secretary of the Zoological Society; Mr. Barclay V. Head and Mr. E. J. Scott, of the British Museum; Mr. E. W. Hulme, of H. M. Patent Office; also of Sir J. S. Burdon-Sanderson and Dr. W. Sykes, F.S.A., of Woking, with the history of medical terms; of Professor J. K. Laughton and Mr. M. Oppenheim, with the history of naval terms; of Professor Albert H. Chester, of New Brunswick, N.J., with names of minerals; and of Mr. Albert Matthews, of Boston, U.S., with the history of many American uses of words, especially during the Colonial period.

The Assistants in the Scriptorium, who have been engaged on this volume, are Messrs. C. G. Balk; A. T. Maling, M.A.; F. J. Sweatman, M.A.; A. R. Sewell; and H. Price. On parts of the work earlier or later, there have also been engaged Messrs. C. T. Onions, M.A.; A. H. Mann, B.A.; E. J. Thomas, B.A.; and Miss Hilda Murray. Mr. Alfred Erlebach, B.A., a valued member of the Scriptorium staff in earlier times, who continued to render occasional assistance, died on October 7, 1899. In the latter half of this volume I have also had the collaboration of Mr. W. A. Craigie, M.A., who has taken a large share in the preparation of K, especially of the etymological articles, and has now been entrusted with the preparation of volume VIII.

H.

H (ætʃ), the eighth letter of the Roman alphabet, ancient and modern, representing historically the Semitic Ḥ, Hheth or Kheth, through the Greek Η, Heta, Eta, originally the eighth, but, in the later Greek alphabet, after the omission of Ϝ (see F), the seventh letter. The Semitic letter represented a laryngeal or guttural spirant, or a rough aspirate, and it was with the aspirate value that the letter was originally used in Greek and passed thence into Roman use. (In the later Greek alphabet, Η was used as a vowel, to express long ē, which had previously not been distinguished from short e: see E.) When the Roman alphabet was applied to the Germanic languages, H was used initially for the simple aspirate or breath-sound, which had arisen out of a pre-Germanic or Aryan h, through the stages of guttural aspirate (kh), and guttural spirant (χ); medially and finally h was put for the guttural spirant itself, which, in later times, came to be written gh or ch: thus, Gothic hauh, OHG. hōh, OE. hēah, mod. English high (gh mute), Scotch heich, Ger. hoch. In Old English, h occurred not only before the vowels, but also before the consonants l, n, r, w (representing the pre-Germanic hl-, kn-, kr-, kw-, or g-), as in hlaf loaf, hnecca neck, hræfn raven, hwd who; it now stands initially only before vowels. Its power is that of a simple aspiration or breathing, with just sufficient narrowing of the glottis to be audible before a vowel. It is also used to form consonantal digraphs (sh, th, etc.) with simple sounds; and it is often silent, or merely lengthens a preceding vowel.

The name aitch, which is now so remote from any connexion with the sound, goes back through ME. ache to OF. ache = Sp. ache, It. acca, pointing to a late L. accha*, ahha*, or aha*, exemplifying the sound; cf. It. effe, elle, emme, etc. (The earlier L. name was ha.) The plural occurs as aitches, aches, hs, h's.

In late Latin, and in the Romanic languages, the aspirate was no longer pronounced, and consequently often not written; in modern Italian it is entirely omitted, as in eretico, istorico, orribile. In Old French similarly the mute h was originally not written, and it was in this form that many Old French words, such as abit, able, eir, erbe, eritage, onest, onor or onur, ure or oure, ympne, were originally adopted in English. From this stage we derive the still existing forms able, ability, arbour (= erbere), ostler. But at a later period, imitation of the Latin spelling, by scribes who knew that language, gradually led to the restitution of h in the writing of most of these words in French, and thence also in English. In French, the h, though thus artificially reinstated in spelling, remained mute; but in England it was gradually, after the usage of the native words, restored in pronunciation, so that at the present day only a very few words, viz. heir, honest, honour, hour, with their derivatives, remain with h mute; though others, such as herb, humble, humour, were so treated very recently, and are by some people still; and hostler (also spelt ostler) is so pronounced by the majority. A trace of the former muteness or weakness of h in other words is also seen in the still prevalent practice of using an before words with initial h, not accented on the first syllable, as heretical, historical, humane, hypotenuse, and in such archaic forms as 'mine host', and the biblical 'an Hebrew'. In the ME. period, during which h was being gradually reinstated in words from Old French, these show great variety of spelling, the same word appearing now with, and now without h; this uncertainty reacted upon other words beginning with a vowel, so that these also often received an initial h (due probably in some instances, as habundant, to a mistaken notion of their etymology). This spelling has been permanently established in the words hermit and hostage, among others.

VOL. V.

In Old English, as in the Teutonic languages generally, initial h was strongly and distinctly aspirated. But early in the Middle-English period it was dropped in pronunciation and writing before l, n, and r. The old hw was from the 12th c. commonly written wh, sometimes w only, in Scotch gwh, guh; indicating a variety of pronunciation (see W). Before vowels, in words of Old English or Norse origin, h has been regularly retained in the standard spelling and pronunciation: but in many English dialects, especially those of the midl. and southern counties (not in Scotland, Ireland, or the United States), the aspirate has disappeared as an ordinary etymological element, and is now employed only with other functions, viz. to avoid hiatus (e.g. the egg, pronounced the-h-egg), and especially in the emphatic or energetic utterance of a syllable with an initial vowel; being then prefixed without distinction to words with or without etymological h; thus horse, ass, usually dh, dh, emphatically (or after a vowel) dhass, dhass. In earlier periods, these dialectal habits naturally affected the written language of literature, where their influence was reinforced by the uncertainty that prevailed as to initial h in words of Latin-French origin; so that during the Middle-English period, and down to the 17th c., we find numerous instances of the non-etymological absence or (more often) presence of initial h in native words also. These characteristics are not confined to English: some modern Dutch and Flemish dialects, especially those of Zealand, Flanders, and North Brabant, have entirely lost h as an etymological element, and employ it to avoid hiatus, and to impart emphasis, exactly like the English dialects; while in Old High German, Middle Low German, Middle Dutch, and, above all, Middle Flemish literature, the non-etymological absence and presence of initial h is even more marked than in Middle English. In this Dictionary, some of the chief forms found in earlier use with adventitious initial h are mentioned in their alphabetical order, with a reference to their proper spelling, especially when this is not seen by simple omission of the h; but in other cases it is to be presumed that, when a ME. word in h is not entered here, it will be found in the form without h.

In recent times, the correct treatment of initial h in speech has come to be regarded as a kind of shibboleth of social position; this has resulted in the cultivation of the educated usage in many quarters where it is not native. But even in educated pronunciation, there are cases in which h is usually mute, e.g. at the beginning of a syllable after certain consonant groups, as in exhaust, exhortation, and in such suffixes as -ham, -hope, in Chatham, Clapham, Durham, Greenhope, Stanhope, Tudhope, herd in shepherd, as well as in the pronouns he, his, him, her, when unemphatic and as it were enclitically combined with the preceding word, as in 'I met him on his horse'. In the corresponding neuter pronoun it, originally hit, in which the unemphatic use predominates, the h was long ago dropped in writing as well as speech. (But in Scotch the emphatic form is still hit.)

After a vowel, h is regularly silent, and such a vowel being usually long, as in oh, ah, bah, hurrah, the addition of h (so usual in modern German) is one of the expedients which we have for indicating a long vowel in foreign or dialect words. The silence of h in certain positions contributed to the currency of such spellings as the obsolete preheminece, proheme, abominable.

By the combination of h with consonants, numerous digraphs are formed for the expression of simple sounds; the origin of this goes back to the ancient Greek alphabet, which used PH, TH, KH, for the aspirated consonants, which were afterwards provided with single symbols Φ, Θ, Χ, and sank into simple spirants. In Latin the digraphs were retained, and thence th, ch, and occasionally ph, were taken to represent German spirants or aspirates. In Old English, which had þ, ð, for the sound or sounds represented on the continent by th, these digraphs had little currency until after the Norman Conquest, which introduced th, ch, gh, and sometimes ph, for certain English sounds, and substituted wh for OE. hw; the development of a simple sound (j) from the OE. combination sc, led, through sch, to the digraph sh; ph and rh (pronounced f and r) were adopted from Latin as the representatives of Gr. φ and ρ; in more recent times kh has been used to express Slavonic and Semitic guttural spirants; dh, dh, gh, ph, th, kh, to represent Sanskrit and Indian aspirates, or other alien sounds; and zh (on the analogy, s: z: sh: zh) for the phonetic representation of French j in déjeuner, symbolized in this Dictionary by z. (For the history and use of these digraphs, see under their respective initial letters, C, G, etc.)

The sense-development, as seen in Latin and the modern languages taken together, is thus: orig. Holding, having, 'haviour'; hence the way in which one holds or has oneself, i. e. the mode or condition in which one is, exists, or exhibits oneself, a) externally; hence demeanour, outward appearance, fashion of body, mode of clothing oneself, dress, habitation; b) in mind, character, or life; hence, mental constitution, character, disposition, way of acting, comporting oneself, or dealing with things, habitual or customary way (of acting, etc.), personal custom, accustomedness. This development was largely completed in ancient Latin, and had received some extension in OF., before the word became English; in our language, senses were taken, from time to time, from Fr. or L., without reference to their original order of development; hence the chronological order in Eng. is in no way parallel to the original; and the arrangement below is only partly chronological. In mod.F. the word is narrowed down to our branch I, other senses being supplied by habitude; thus Eng. 'habit' is co-extensive with the two French words, and its chief sense corresponds not to F. habit but to F. habitude.

Hackle (hæ'k'l), sb.² In 5 hakell, 6 hacel; see also HECKLE, HATCHELL. [Not recorded in OE.; but the various ME. forms hechele, hetchell (c. 1300), hekele (c. 1440), hakell (1485), and the later hatchell, point to OE. hacule*, hæcle*. No corresponding words are recorded in the early stage of any Germanic lang., but MHG. hachele, hechele, (mod.G. hechel), MLG. and MDu. hekele, (Du. hekel), Da. hegle, Sw. häckla, all point to OTeut. type hakilā*, hakulā*, str. fem. with suffix-ablaut; prob. from the root hak- of OHG. hakjan*, hæchen, hecken, to prick, pierce, stab, and of HOOK, q.v.

It has been suggested that hackle came immediately from Du.; but the ME. hechele, hetchell, testify to an OE. hecel, which would also give hackle in the north; so also, the vowel of hackle, hatchell can be explained only from OE. (Sense 2 is prob. the same word, or from the same root; sense 3 is more doubtful.)

It is now agreed by French and Dutch scholars that MDu. hackeneie, hackeneye, Du. hakkenij, to which some have referred the French word, was merely adopted from the French, thus disposing of conjectures as to the derivation of the word from MDu. hacken to hoe. The French haquenée and its Romanic equivalents had probably some relationship with OF. haque, OSP. and Pg. jaca, Sp. haca 'a nag, a gelding, a hackney' (Minsheu): but, although the word-group has engaged the most eminent etymologists, its ulterior derivation is still unknown.]

Half (hāf), a. Forms: 1 healf, hæalf, 1-half; also 5 halve, alfe, half, 5-7 halfe. [Common Teut.: OE. healf, half = OFris., OS. (MDu., Du., LG.) half, OHG. and Ger. halb, ON. halfr, (Sw. half, Da. halv), Goth. halbs = OTeut. halboz*; not known outside Teutonic. The appearance of 'side' as the oldest sense of HALF sb. makes the original meaning of the adj. uncertain.]

1. Being one of the two equal parts into which a thing is or may be divided; forming a half or moiety.

a. immediately preceding the sb., and preceded by a defining word (demonstrative or possessive, genitive case, etc.), as a half length, his half share.

When the two words constitute a recognized unit or individual, half is usually hyphenated to the sb., as in half-crown: see HALF II. The limits are necessarily undefined and vague, and the use of the hyphen is a matter of perspicuity in the particular connexion.

b. separated from the sb. by demonstrative or defining words, as half the length, half my family. (Formerly sometimes following the sb.)

The adj. character of half appears in OE. and early ME. by its inflexion; in mod. use it is sometimes viewed as a sb. with of suppressed, as in 'half (half of, one half of) the men were sick, a quarter or a third of them seriously ill': cf. also quot. 1667.

c. esp. with sbs. denoting numbers, quantities, measures of weight, space, time, or money, as half a dozen, half a bushel, half a pound, half a foot, half an hour, half a crown.

When these are viewed as independent numbers, amounts, coins, etc., half is preceded by a, the, etc. and hyphenated to the sb., as a half-dozen, the half-bushel, his half-pound, a long half-hour, a bad half-crown: see HALF II. A half-crown is the silver coin worth 2s. 6d.; half a crown includes the equivalent amount in any coins, e. g. n five sixpences.

† 2. Half, preceded or followed by an ordinal numeral, was formerly used to express a half-unit less than the corresponding cardinal number; thus OE. pridda half, ME. thridde half or half thrid = two and a half. Obs.

This is an ancient Teutonic mode of reckoning: cf. Ger. anderthalb (= OE. oðer healf), dritte halb, etc. In English it is scarcely found after 1300. The expression is explained in quot. 811 as elliptical: 'two (whole) messuages and a third half-messuage', contracted to pridda half haza. Hence the following sb. was originally singular, bridda half hylde = two and a half hide. As in Old Norse, etc., half was either declined as an adj. (quot. 891), or stood in the uninflected combining form.

811 Charter in O. E. Texts 456 Duas possessiunculas et tertiam dimediam, id est in nostra loquela, bridda half haza. 891 *O. E. 4. Idiomatic uses, in which half is now adverbial, though probably originally the adj. or sb.

a. In stating the time of day, half past (or after) one or one o'clock, etc. = half an hour past the hour named. (In Scotland, 'half' is often prefixed to the following hour, as in Ger. halb elf, etc.)

1750 G. B. DODDINGTON Diary (1785) 74 Just at half past twelve she was delivered of a Prince. c. 1792 GROSE Olio (1796) 107 C. Pray what's o'clock? W. It will be half ten. 1818 JAS. MILL Brit. Johnstone 294 Flucker informed her that the nock said 'half eleven'—Scotch for 'half-past-ten'. 1891 Murray's Mag. Apr. 445 It was half after eight o'clock one evening.

b. Naut. Between the names of two points of the compass, half = half a point (i. e. 5½°) from the first towards the second point mentioned.

c. Naut. In soundings, half before a numeral adds half to it; thus half four = 4½ fathoms.

We shall have half four directly, and after that the water will deepen. c. 1860 H. STUART Seaman's Catech. 43 Suppose 4½ fathoms, what soundings would you call? And a half four.

Half, in comb. [OE. half, healf, was regularly combined with an adj. or pple., as in healfweic, healfdrad, healfhwit, healfredad, healfsoden, healf- slæpiende; also with a sb., as healfhtafod forehead, healfmann, healfpenig, healfstrendel hemisphere. In OE. half appears to have been a later substitute for the original sāmi-, OE. sam-, as in OHG. sāmiquec, OS. sāmquic, OE. samcwic half alive, so sambærnd half-burnt, sambrice a half-breach; = L. sēmi- in sēmidoculus, sēmivivus, sēmicoccus, sēmideus, sēmihomo, etc.; Gr. ἡμι- in ἡμιβάροπος, ἡμιπλόηρος, ἡμιάνθρωπος, ἡμίθεος, etc.; Skr. sāmi, in sāmijīvas half alive, etc.]

I. In adverbial relation.

1. With adjectives and pa. pples. Already in OE.: see above. Very common in later use, esp. with pa. pples., to which half may be prefixed whenever the sense suits: e. g. half-afraid, -awake, -blind, -crazy, -deaf, -drunk, -full, -human, -learned, -mad, -open, -raw, -ripe, -savage, -true; half-armed, -ashamed, -beni, -buried, -cured, -disposed, -done, -dressed, -eaten, -educated, -finished, -formed, -hidden, -opened, -roasted, -ruined, etc., etc. With adjs. expressing shape, it implies the form of half the figure, as half-cordate, -sagittate, -terete.

The two elements are often written separately when the adj. is in the predicate (see HALF adv. 1); the use of the hyphen mostly implies a feeling of closer unity of notion in the compound attribute, as in half-blind, half-dressed, half-raw, viewed as definite states; but it is often merely for greater syntactical perspicuity, on which ground it is regularly used when the adjective is attributive, thus I am half dead (or half-dead) with cold; a half-dead dog.

II. In attributive relation to a sb.

Of these there were already a few instances in OE. (e. g. healfmann 'semivir', healfpenig, healfstrendel hemisphere); their number has been enormously increased in later times, especially through the practice of hyphenating an adjective and substantive when these have a special or individualized application. These combinations may be distributed among the following classes:

a. In names of Coins, Weights, Measures of space, quantity, time, etc., as half-barrel, -bit, -cent, -cooper, -farthing, -firkin, -florin, -foot, -hogshead, -inch, -joe, -mile, -mutchkin, -peck, -pint, -pipe, -pound, -quarter, -quartern, -tierce. Handicap (hæ'ndikæp), sb. [A word of obscure history. Two examples of the sb., and one of the verb, are known in 17th c.; its connexion with horse-racing appears in the 18th; its transferred general use, esp. in the verb, since 1850. It appears to have originated in the phrase 'hand i' cap', or 'hand in the cap', with reference to the drawing mentioned in sense 1.]

1. The name of a kind of sport having an element of chance in it, in which one person challenged some article belonging to another, for which he offered something of his own in exchange. (Also fig.)

On the challenge being entertained, an umpire was chosen to decree the difference of value between the two articles, and all three parties deposited forfeit-money in a cap or hat. The umpire then pronounced his award as to the 'boot' or odds to be given with the inferior article, on hearing which the two other parties drew out full or empty hands to denote their acceptance or non-acceptance of the match in terms of the award. If the two were found to agree in holding the match either 'on' or 'off', the whole of the money deposited was taken by the umpire; but if not, by the party who was willing that the match should stand. (See Notes & Queries 23 June, 1855).

This sport is described under the name of Neuve Faire, in Piers Plowman A. v. 171, B. v. 328, C. vii. 377, where 'Clement' be cobelere caste of his cloke', for which 'Hikke' be hakeneyman' wagered his hood, and 'Robyn' be ropere' was named for 'a noupere', to ordain how much 'who-so' haueth the hood shuld haue amendes of the cloke'. For reference to a similar sport in Scandinavia and Germany (where called Freimarkt), see Germania XIX. (1874) 1, Engl. Stud. V. 150. A recent example occurs in R. S. SURTEES 'Mr. Sponges Sporting Tour' ch. xiv, in which the challenge is between a gold watch and a horse. In later times the result became the subject of further betting on the part of the bystanders: see The Sportsman 17 April 1897, 5/5.

2. Horse-racing. (orig. attrib.) a. Handicap match: a match between two horses, the arrangement of which was made in accordance with the sport of handicap in i, the umpire here decreeing the extra weight to be carried by the superior horse, and the parties drawing as in i to declare whether the match should be 'on' or 'off', with the same chances as to the forfeit-money. Obs.

(Such matches are recorded as early as 1680, but the term 'handicap' does not appear.)

1744 Pond's Racing Calendar p. xxxii, Rules concerning Racing in general, with a Description of a Post and Handy-Cap Match. A Handy-Cap Match, is for A, B, and C, to put an equal Sum into a Hat, C, which is the Handy-Capper, makes a Match for A, and B, which when perused by them, they put their Hands into their Pockets and draw them out closed, then they open them together, and if both have Money in their Hands, the Match is confirm'd; if neither have Money, it is no Match: In both Cases the Hand-Capper draws all the Money out of the Hat; but if one has Money in his Hand, and the other none, then it is no Match; and he that has the Money in his Hand is intitled to the Deposit in the Hat. If a Match is made without the Weight being mentioned, each Horse must carry ten Stone. [So in 'Rules of Racing' in Racing Calendar 1826, and Blaine Encycl. Rural Sports ed. 1832.]

b. Handicaprace (shortened handicap): a horse-race in which an umpire (the handicapper) decrees what weights have to be carried by the various horses entered, according to his judgement of their merits, in order to equalize their chances. So handicap plate, sweepstakes, etc.

There is no beast so miserable, but that he may possibly succeed in a handicap. 1871 Rules of Racing in J. Rice Hist. Brit. Turf (1879) II. 367 A 'handicap' is a race in which the weights which the horses are to carry are to be adjusted after the time limited for entering or naming, according to the handicapper's judgment of the merits of the horses, for the purpose of equalizing their chances of winning. . . A free handicap is one in which no liability for stake or forfeit is incurred until acceptance, and no entry need be made.

3. Any race or competition in which the chances of the competitors are sought to be equalized by giving an advantage to the less efficient or imposing a disadvantage upon the more efficient.

Besides the method of weighting, as in 2, this may be done in various ways, according to the nature of the game, as by requiring the superior competitor to accomplish a greater distance (i.e. giving a start to the inferior), to do it in a shorter time, to play with fewer men or pieces, etc.

1875 J. D. HEATH Croquet Player 87. 5. (See quot.)

1868 BREWER Phr. & Fable, Handicap, a game at cards not unlike Loo, but with this difference—the winner of one trick has to put in a double stake, the winner of two tricks a triple stake, and so on. Thus: if six persons are playing, and the general stake is 15, and A gains three tricks, he gains 45, and has to 'hand' the cap or pool, 35, for the next deal. Suppose A gains two tricks and B one, then A gains 45, and B 25, and A has to stake 35, and B 25, for the next deal. [No confirmation has been found.]

6. attrib., as handicap match, plate, prize, race. 1754. etc. Handicap-match, -plate [see 2]. 1856 H. H. DIXON Post & Paddock x. 175. Hang (hæŋ), v. Pa. t. and pple. hang (hæŋ), hanged (hænd). Forms: see below. [The history of this word involves that of two OE. and one ON. verb; viz. (1) the OE. str. hōn (:—hāhan), heng (? hēng), hangen, (hōngen), trans.; (2) the OE. weak hangian, hangode, -od, (also hōng-), intr. = OFris. hangia, OS. hangōn (for OHG. hangēn); (3) the ON. causal vb. hangian trans. = OHG. hengan, MHG., MDu. hengen. OE. hōn = OS. and OHG. hāhan, MHG. hāhen, hān, MLG. hān, MDu. hāen, represented the OTeut. reduplicating vb., with consonant-exchange (grammatischer wechsel), hāhan (from earlier hayhan*), kehāh (pl. kehaygun), hangān-, in Gothic, hāhan, hahhāh, hahhāhun, hāhan- (levelled under the present tense form). In WGer. and Norse, the pa. t. had the type hægg: OS. heng, OHG. hiang, MHG. hienc, Ger. hing, ON. hekk, pl. hengur; OE. heng (? hēng), ME. heng, hieng, heyng, hing. The pa. pple. hangen also varied in OE. and ME. with hōngen (as in lang, long, etc.). Already in ON. the present stem hāh- had been ousted by the weak form hanga, and in the Middle period a similar change took place in all the WGer. langs.: MHG. hāhen, hāngen, MDu. hāen, hāngen, ME. hōn, hāngen (hōngen). This identified the old trans. vb. with the intr. hangian, hangion, so that both had now for the pres. t. hang (hōng); in consequence of which the strong pa. t. and pa. pple. heng (hēng), hangen (hōngen), and the weak forms, hangede (hōngede), -ed, became also generally confounded in sense, and (with some exceptions) used indiscriminately. Meanwhile the ON. causal verb hangia came into northern Eng.

as heng (e, also (with Eng. change of -en to -in)), hing; at first app. with weak inflexion and trans. sense, hengde, hanged, hingde, hinged; but soon, by assimilation to the 3rd ablaut-class of str. verbs, with a pa. t. hang, varying in north. midl. with hong, both trans. and intr. At this period (13-15th c.), therefore, while the south had pres. t. hang, hong, and pa. heng, hing, the north had conversely pres. heng, hing, pa. hang, hong. Finally the northern inflexion hing, hang, was completed by the pa. pple. hung, which in the 16th c. penetrated into general Eng.; where arose a new pa. t. hung (like sing, sung, sung), in presence of which the earlier heng, hing, and hong became obs. The weak inflexion hanged however continued in use (being the only one used in Bible versions from Coverdale to 1611, though Tindale had also houng); but was gradually superseded by hung in the general sense, trans. and intr., leaving hanged only in the special trans. sense (3) 'put to death by hanging', owing prob. to the retention of this archaic form by judges in pronouncing capital sentences. The distinction is found already in Shakspeare, and is established in the objuratory expressions 'You be hanged!' 'I'll be hanged if I do', and the like. Nevertheless southern speakers and writers still often say 'the man was hung' instead of 'hanged'. In the northern dialects, on the other hand, the distinction runs all through the verb, the special sense 'put to death by hanging' being expressed by hang, hang'd, hang'd, while the general verb is hing, hang, hung; the present tense hing extends into England as far south as Northamptonshire: see A. 1, quot. 1821. In those dialects, therefore, hing and hang are distinct verbs, differing both in sense and inflexion; but in Standard English, there being only the single form hang for the present tense, it is necessary to treat all the forms together. (Hang is parallel in inflexion to FANG v.)

The distinction of trans. and intr. has always tended to break down. The strong verb was orig. trans. in WGer. and in OE., hangian being the intr.; but in ON., hangia, hekk, hangenn was intr., and the causal hangia trans.; hang is only trans. in Orm., but Cursor M. and Hampole have heng, hing, both trans. and intr., like the contemporary southern hang, hong. Cf. also mod. Ger., in which the true intr. hangen is archaic, and ordinarily superseded by the trans. hängen, though the pa. tenses hing intr. and hängte trans. remain distinct in use.)

|| Hanif, Haneef (hanif). [Arab. حنيف hanif, app. the same as Heb. חנף hanif impious.

It has been conjectured by Sprenger and others that in Mohammed's early days there was a sect of reformed Jews, who professed to follow the religion of Abraham, to whom enemies gave the epithet hanif, 'impious', and that Mohammed, being misled as to the meaning of the word, adopted it in a good sense.]

A name or epithet applied in the Koran to Abraham; hence, also, to one sincere or orthodox in the faith of Islam. By historical writers, applied to a sect of religious reformers, with many of whose tenets Mohammed identified himself, as professing to restore the religion of Abraham.

The subsequent history shows two lines of phonetic change, viz. the change of her- to har-, usual with er- before a consonant (as in bark, barrow, hart, marsh, and the pronunciation of clerk, sergeant, Berkshire, Hertford, etc.); and the weakening of the second element to -ber, -bor, -bour; the current harbour exhibits both of these changes. [As a word of masculine gender found early in 13th c., as feminine in 15th c.; a. OF. herlot, harlot, arlot masc., lad, young fellow, base fellow, knave, vagabond = Pr. arlot vagabond, beggar, It. arlotto 'a lack-latin or hedge-priest' (Florio), 'glutton, greedy gut, great eater' (Baret); cf. med.L. arlotus, erlotus glutton (Mahn); OSP. arlot, alrote lazy, sluggardly, loafing; OPG. alrotar to go about begging, Pg. to mock. The random conjecture of Lambard, 1570-6, retailed by many later writers, that harlot in sense 5 c was derived from the name of Arlette or Herleva, mother of William the Conqueror, could have been offered only after the earlier senses and uses of the word were forgotten.]

(This application, which originated with the ancient Pythagoreans, is generally held to have arisen from the fact that a string or other sonorous body, divided into segments whose lengths are $\frac{1}{2}$, $\frac{1}{3}$, etc. of the total length, gives a definite series of musical notes whose relations are of fundamental importance in harmony; see A. 4, B. 2.)

Harmonic function, a function consisting of a series of terms, each of which expresses a harmonic motion; in a wider sense, any function that satisfies a differential equation of a class of which that expressing a simple harmonic motion is the first example. Harmonic analysis, the calculus of harmonic functions, an important part of modern mathematical analysis. Harmonic curve, a curve in which the ordinates are a simple harmonic function of the abscissae; a curve of sines. Harmonic analyser, an integrating machine invented by Lord Kelvin for producing mechanically the harmonic constituents of meteorological, tidal, and other curves.

1. pl. A theory or system of musical sounds or intervals; that part of acoustics which relates to music. (Rarely in sing.) Obs. exc. in reference to ancient systems.

1709-29 V. MANDY Syst. Math., Arith. 48 That the Lovers of Music may have the Proportions in view... we thought it convenient in this place to expose the Harmonicks of the Ingenious John Kepler. 1760 STILES in Phil. Trans. LI. 698 Harmonic was divided into these seven parts; 1. of sounds, 2. of intervals, 3. of genera, 4. of systems, 5. of tones, 6. of mutations, 7. of melopoeia. 1837 WHEWELL Hist. Induct. Sc. (1857) I. 50 The truths of Harmonics... were cultivated with much care.

2. (Short for harmonic tone.) One of the secondary or subordinate tones produced by vibration of the aliquot parts of a sonorous body (as a string, reed, column of air in a pipe, etc.); usually accompanying the primary or fundamental tone produced by the vibration of the body as a whole. Also called overtone or upper partial (as being of higher pitch than the fundamental tone).

Harmonics are sometimes produced independently, as in the violin and other stringed instruments by varying the point of contact of the bow, or by lightly pressing the string with the finger at special points, and in certain wind instruments by varying the force or direction of the breath. Natural harmonics: the series of harmonics naturally produced by the vibration of a string, etc., in halves, thirds, quarters, and so on; also, on instruments of the violin class, harmonics obtained from an open string, those from a stopped string being called artificial harmonics. Grave harmonic: a name sometimes given to a low tone resulting from the combination of two tones = differential tone.

1777 SIR W. JONES Ess. Arts Poems, etc. 196 These accessory sounds, which are caused by the aliquots of a sonorous body vibrating at once, are called harmonics, and the whole system of modern Harmony depends upon them. 1831 H. MELVILLE in Preacher II. 281 The harmonics of some Italian musician. 1880 E. J. PAYNE in Grove Dict. Mus. I. 664 The harmonics... determine... as has been lately proved by Helmholtz, the quality of musical tones. Ibid. 665 Natural harmonics... are an important resource in harp music. Brass instruments are richest in the practical employment of harmonics. 1884 HAWES My Musical Life i. 26-7 Playing all sort of melodies in flute-like harmonics.

3. Math. = Harmonic function (A. 5 b), in the wider sense. Spherical harmonic, a harmonic function having a relation to Spherical Geometry akin to that which functions expressing harmonic motion have to Plane Geometry. Such are spherical solid harmonics, spherical surface harmonics, sectorial, tesseral, and zonal harmonics, etc.

1867 THOMSON & TAIT Nat. Philos. i. I. App. B. General expressions for complete spherical harmonics of all orders. 1873 MAXWELL Electr. & Magn. I. 163 When the poles are given, the value of the harmonic for a given point on the sphere is a perfectly definite numerical quantity. 1885 WATSON & BURBURY Math. Th. Electr. & Magn. I. 67 To express the potential at any point P of any distribution of matter in a series of spherical solid harmonics. Ibid. 68 It is evident that the density of this distribution on the sphere must be symmetrical about OC, and must therefore be expressible in a series of zonal harmonics with OC as axis.

was transformed in It., by popular etymology, into arcobugio, -buso (arco bow + bugio, buso 'hollow, hole', in reference to the hollow barrel, and to its taking the place of the bow or arbalest), also later archibugio, -buso (cf. Sp. arcabuz); under the influence of the It., the earlier French name haquebute (see HACKBUT) was changed through the intermediate harquebute, harquebuse, to arquebuse. These French forms were in turn adopted in English, where also the influence of the earlier hackbush, hagbush, gave rise to the mixed forms harquebush, hargubush, harguebuse, etc.]

1. The early type of portable gun, varying in size from a small cannon to a musket, which on account of its weight was, when used in the field, supported upon a tripod, trestle, or other 'carriage', and afterwards upon a forked 'rest'. The name in German and Flemish meant literally 'hook-gun', from the hook cast along with the piece, by which it was fastened to the 'carriage'; but the name became generic for portable fire-arms generally in the 16th century, so that the type with the hook was subsequently distinguished as arquebuse à croc: see 2.

According to Wendelin Boeheim, Handbuch der Waffenkunde (Leipzig 1890) 447, 455, the hook of the original hakenbüchse was intended to hold on to a wall or other fixed object, partly to support the weight of the barrel and partly to diminish the recoil. Maximilian I (early 16th cent.) introduced the portable tripod which could be put together in the field. The forked rest came in about 1520, with the Spanish musket.

(As this was exactly the original hakenbüchse, the addition à croc, 'with hook', was doubtless made after the etymological meaning of haquebute or arquebuse was forgotten, and the name extended to fire-arms which had no haken or croc. Littré identifies the croc with the fourchette or rest, but one of his quotations has 'chacun une harquebuz à croc sans fourchette' and another explains the use of the croc: 'harquebuses à croc, que l'on ne peut bien tirer si elles ne sont liées et accrochées sur du bois', tied and hooked upon wood.)
